The University of Scranton Religious Observance Policy: Students

I. Policy Statement: The University of Scranton proudly acknowledges its Roman Catholic and Jesuit core values, and are committed to a policy of reasonable accommodation of religious practices essential to other ligious traditions due to observance of religious holy days that are notamenged with the relevant faculty member within the first three class days may be considered unexcused, and the faculty member may therefore prevent the student from making up examinations or assignments missed during the period of absence.

- Students are responsible for all material presented and all announcements made during class the student missed during the period of absence in observance of a religious holy day and to make up exams or quizzes scheduled on their observance day.
- 4. Faculty members are urged to remind students of their obligation to inform faculty members within the first three classdays of any anticipated absencesdue to observance of religious holy days and include that information in the syllabus or course requirements document for that course.
- 5. To support this policy, Multifaith Religious Observance Daylist will be conjointly maintained by the Office of Equity and Diversity the division of Mission and Ministry. Although not an exhaustive or exclusive listing, this will the this the thick that may be important to students and other members of our campus community. This lists included as an appendix to this policy document.
